NOVELS OF PASSION.

The novelists are running a lively tilt against novels which portray human passion. These books are the works which goody people peruse in private, and denounce in public. While Tristram Shandy, from the pen of an Episcopal clergyman; Tom Jones, Boccaccio, and the like, occupy the shelves of private libraries as standard works, we fail to see why there should be such an outcry against, "The Quick or the Dead" or "Hermia Suydam." These writers are treading new paths, or at least we may say that they are trending the old paths at a little different gait.

We should not condemn women for writing books in an original vein. There has been too many old hum drum novels written and the public has begun to hanker for a taste of stronger meat.

What might have been good for our Puritanical ancestors will not do for the present generation.

One who writes a book now, must strike a note a little out of tune with the rest to be heard. Amelia Reeves and Mrs. Atherton have struck two sharp notes that have attracted attention, and the writers who are not able to attract attention, are rendering them for their audacity. The preachers and the press try to play the role of prudes, but no one is deceived.

The thirsty public drinks at the new fountain of literature and laps the new wine with the gusto of a plow horse at a mountain spring. There may be some mud about the spring but they get there just the same. The reading public, just now, wants something to quicken the blood, and as fast as they pour down one draught they call for more.

We understand both these writers are hard at work on other books, and every body is waiting for the deliciously dreadful volumes.

THE NEW STATES.

The admission of four new States to the Union is a fitting sequel to the Republican victory of last Fall. These new States have been for a long time knocking at the door of the Republic, demanding admission, and now the march of progress and improvement has denied them in a position where a denial of their claims would be no longer possible.

The area of the new territory added to the Union is greater than the combined territory of the New England States, and embraces a section of country fast growing in importance and resources. Another thing to be considered is the political advantage given the Republican party. These states are all Republican, and the electoral votes which are added to the Republican pyramid will cause New York to no longer be regarded necessary to Republican success; and Wall street will pass away forever as a controlling influence in national politics.

The shifting of the political center of gravitation westward, means the decline of the gold element, which has so long dominated national affairs, and a return to the silver basis of money, under which the country so long enjoyed a regime of national prosperity. It means a brighter era for Nevada and the Pacific slope, and the continued supremacy of the Republican party, means a continuance of the progress of the whole country. The Solid South seeing no longer a chance for political succession will break away from the old fire eating leaders, and the result will be a complete amalgamation of the interests of the four points of the compass in the dominion of Uncle Sam, and we will become a prosperous, happy and united people.

The suicide of the miserable cur Piggott who blew out his brains to avoid arrest is a fitting climax for the Times assault on Parnell and the most commendable act of Piggott's wretched existence.
